From the outside looking in Monica's family is picture perfect. A hardworking father who provides the prestigious lifestyle that anybody would be envious of. A loving and devoted mother who gets to stay at home, raise the children, and do hair on the side out of her in house salon her husband had built just for her. Monica and her little brother are afforded the life any child would Die to have. If the walls could talk it would tell the real truth of domestic violence, infidelity, verbal, and child abuse. A price the whole family has to pay. When tragedy hits, she's forced to trade places with her mother. Everything that glitters isn't always gold as Monica spins the web of her story.
