When Bridget Sullivan drove past a vehicle with a flat tire, she knew she had to stop and offer assistance. It didn't matter that the vehicle in question was a huge limousine, or that the handsome man stranded by the side of the road was the most dangerous man in Chicago, none other than Domenic Martinelli himself, the son of the Mafia Boss and his number one hit man. She offered to drive him to the nearest garage, where he could borrow a jack, and that would be that. At least, she hoped so. It was tempting, but SO not a good idea, to accept the wad of money he shoved in her face. Barely containing her ire, she refused and drove away, expecting never to see him again.

She was completely caught by surprise when she went to make her mortgage payment only to find that it had already been paid - in full. There was only one man with the money or motivation to do that, the same irritating, arrogant, bossy Domenic Martinelli! She marched right over to his trucking company, no doubt a front for his more lucrative exploits, to demand he take back his money and leave her alone! She was equally surprised to find herself over his lap for a sound spanking! The man was impossible! He was incorrigible - and he was dangerous. Especially since her own body couldn't seem to get enough of him. She was tempted by his strength and compassion - a side she was sure few others ever saw. She was tempted by his kisses and kindnesses. One thing was certain, she was falling for him and his dangerous love.

Dangerous Love is Book Three in the Priceless Love Series.
