Hunter doesn't dream of much. I mean a good meal and a days rest from his uncles hard labor would be nice, but not essential. Hunter is a survivor.

Then he see's a girl on a white horse take a risk, and Hunter wonders if he could do the same. Can he make friends, discover compassion and warmth, avoid having a bucket of mud thrown over his head, not to mention the bandits? Can he earn respect?

His hope rests in the kindness of a girl, a girl he can't even bring to call by her name. She holds the key to his freedom, to the beginning of a new life for Hunter.

The decision to stray from the beaten track and embark on an adventure, to dare to live a life thrilling and scary and uncharted, isn't an easy one for shy Hunter - but it could pay off. It could change everything.

But will taking a risk be enough?
