In 1944, artist Evelyn Copelman became the illustrator, when she illustrated the 1944 Bobbs-Merrill edition of The Wizard of Oz. Although the book credit for the new illustrations reads "Adapted from the famous pictures by W.W. Denslow", Copelman's versions of the characters were largely based on the way they looked in the 1939 MGM Technicolor film version, although the Cowardly Lion looked quite different, and Dorothy had braids rather than long pigtails, as Judy Garland did in the film. Copelman's illustrations of the Oz characters were much darker, more realistic and less cartoon-like than those of her predecessors.
